UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH CENTRE FOR TROPICAL VETERINARY MEDICINE

Diploma/MSc POSTGRADUATE COURSES

The following courses will be available

(i) TROPICAL VETERINARY MEDICINE. This course is designed for field veterinarians aiming at the senior and middle ranks of veterinary services in developing countries. It deals with the prevention and control of animal diseases at regional and national levels and has a strong epidemiological component. Related aspects of animal production and veterinary public health are also covered.

(ii) TROPICAL VETERINARY SCIENCE. This is a course for veterinarians, which is mainly concerned with the laboratory diagnosis of diseases of animals including poultry and wildlife in developing countries. It also includes the organisation and management of tropical veterinary laboratories and the epidemiology of the major diseases of animals.

(iii) TROPICAL ANIMAL PRODUCTION AND HEALTH. This course which is organised in conjunction with the University's Department of Agriculture is open to agriculture or veterinary graduates intending to specialise in animal production in developing countries. It provides a comprehensive review of the main constraints to animal production likely to be encountered in these countries with an indication of how they may be overcome.

Candidates are registered as Diploma/MSc students. All students take the same course from October to June. Students who attain a required standard in the June examination may continue for a further 3 months during which time they prepare and present a dissertation for the MSc degree. Students who do not reach this standard but who achieve the necessary marks will be awarded the Diploma and complete their studies in June. Students who do not reach the Diploma level in June may resit the Diploma examination in September.

Application forms and further information can be obtained from the Dean, Royal (Dick) School of Veterinary Studies, Summerhall, Edinburgh EH9 1QH, Scotland. Applications should be returned by March 31st (but preferably earlier as the courses are usually over-subscribed) for admission in the following October.

Any further details can be obtained from the Director of the Centre for Tropical Veterinary Medicine, Easter Bush, Roslin EH25 9RG, Midlothian. Scotland.
